Monthly report
April 2021

Markets' review

Economic data was generally very strong, though there are signs that China is slowing, having troughed and rebounded earlier. The US Fed Chair said there would be ample notice on rising rates but only once the economy has fully recovered. The US market has a first rate hike priced for 2022. Inflation remains the topic du jour and most data releases confirmed a trend in rising producer and consumer prices but mostly reflected supply shortages, which may be temporary. One of the new goals of central bank policy is to shift up inflation expectations which pre Covid had become stuck at low levels. While there are risks in encouraging higher inflation, this seems the better option given central banks now constrained ability (given low yields and big debts) to manage deflation compared with their ability to slow inflation. Despite all the positive economic data, the intense selloff in bond yields partially reversed while equities and commodities grew strongly.

Fund positions

The best performing strategies were (1) A blend of Australian bonds, equities, A$ and gold, (2) Wheat blended with bonds and (3) Taiwan equities and bonds. During April the fund further reduced both short and long maturity bond and interest rate positions. Total risk allocation to equities rose, with US, Taiwan and Australia being the largest weights. Oil and wheat are the largest commodity weights, long A$/US$ the largest currency weight and short dated US$ rates the largest bond weight.

The Darling Macro Fund (Class A) rose 5.74% during April.

The Fund generated returns from a wide spread of asset classes: 3.2% from equity, 1.4% from agriculture, 0.7% from bonds, 0.3% from energy while precious metals -0.2 detracted.
